RULES AND REGULATIONS.

AMERICAN TABLES.

The charge for each four ball game of 34 points up shall be 10 cents. If any larger score be played the charge shall be 20 cents. No four ball game of more than 60 points shall be played.

When only three balls are used the game shall be 21, and if a larger score be played the charge shall be doubled as above. No three ball game of over 40 points shall be played.

ENGLISH TABLE.

The English game shall be 63, and the charge therefor 10 cents. The four ball full American game shall be 100. At the conclusion of a game of billiards, billiards must give way to pool if the table be desired for that purpose by more than two players.

The same players shall not be entitled to occupy a table for two consecutive games if other members require the use of it. The priority of applicants shall be decided by the marker, whose business it shall be to place on a slate the names of members who have signified to him their desire to play.

A player cutting or spoiling the cloth shall pay for the same; the extent of damage to be decided by Messrs. Riley & May.

Only members and privileged members have access to the billiard room before dinner, and after dinner only such strangers as may have dined with a member. This rule will be strictly enforced.

All games must be paid for by the loser before leaving the room. All games played with the marker must be paid for whether won or lost.

By Order of the Committee.

A. B. CAMPBELL,
Secretary.

RULES OF THE GAME OF BILLIARDS.

This Game is generally played Fifty or One Hundred up; it is scored by winning hazzards, losing hazards, cannons, coups, and misses, which can be made with the point or butt of any cue. Rests of any description may be used.

1.—The choice of balls and order of play shall, unless mutually agreed upon by the two players, be determined by stringing; and the striker whose ball stops nearest the lower cushion, after being forced from baulk up the table, may take which ball he likes and play, or direct his opponent to play first, as he may deem expedient; after the first game the winner breaks the balls.

2.—The red ball shall, at the opening of every game, be placed on the upper spot, and replaced aft being pocketed or forced off the table, or whenever balls are broken, but if the upper spot be occupied, the red ball shall be placed on the centre spot, and if that also be occupied on the pyramid spot.

3.—Whoever breaks the balls must play out of baulk, though it is not necessary that he shall strike the red ball, and he may give a miss in or out of baulk. The baulk line is a protection throughout the game to any balls behind it; viz., no player who is in hand is allowed to strike any ball in baulk unless his ball has first been out of baulk.

4.—The player continues to play until he ceases to score, when his opponent follows on.

[The scores are counted as below.]

5.—A two stroke is made by pocketing an opponent's ball (i.e., a winning hazard), or by pocketing the striker's ball off his opponent's (i.e., a losing hazard), or by making a cannon; to effect which the striker must cause his ball to strike both the others.

6.—A three stroke is made by pocketing the red ball (i. e., a red winning hazard), or by pocketing the striker's ball off the red (i.e., a red losing hazard).

7.—A four stroke may be made by pocketing the white and spot-white balls, or by making a cannon and pocketing an opponent's ball, or by making a cannon and pocketing the striker's ball, the non-striker's ball having been first hit.

8.—A five stroke may be made by scoring a cannon and pocketing the red ball, or by a cannon and pocketing the striker's ball after having struck the red ball first.

9.—A six stroke is made by the red ball being struck first, and the striker's and the red ball pocketed, or by a cannon off an opponent's ball on to the red and pocketing the two white balls.

10. A seven stroke is made by striking an opponent's ball first, pocketing it, making a cannon, and pocketing the red also, or by making a cannon and pocketing the red and an opponent's ball, or by playing at an opponent's ball first and pocketing all the balls without making a cannon.

11.—An eight stroke is made by striking the red ball first, pocketing it, making a cannon, and pocketing the striker's ball; or by hitting the red first and pocketing all the balls without making a cannon.

12.—A nine stroke is made by striking an opponent's ball first, making a cannon, and pocketing all the balls.

13.—A ten stroke is made by striking the red ball first, making a cannon, and pocketing all the balls.

14.—If a player fails to hit another ball it is called a miss, and counts one to his opponent; but if by the same stroke the player's ball is forced over the table or into a pocket it is called a coup, and counts three to his opponent.

15.—Misses may be given with the point or butt of any cue, if the player in giving a miss, shall strike his ball more than once, the non-striker may oblige him to play the stroke again.

16.—The balls must have stopped rolling before another stroke can be played, otherwise it is unfair, and the opponent may claim to have any score so made disallowed, and may take the lead in place of the last striker by striker breaking the balls; nor can any score at any time be made unless the red ball is on the table, and if any player scores before the red ball has been spotted, his opponent may claim the above penalty.

17.—If the player's ball touches another at the time of playing, the player may either play for safety, or to score, but the score so made does not count and the red ball is spotted, and the balls are broken by his opponent.

18.—If a ball rebounds from the table, and is prevented in any way, or by any object except the cushion, or gas fitting, from falling to the ground, it shall be considered in hand, unless it is the red, which must be spotted.

19.—Forcing any ball off the table, either before or after the score, causes the player to gain nothing by the stroke, and if a score be made, the balls must be broken by the opponent. If no score be made, the opponent if left on the table, plays from where he is, but if his ball has been forced off the table, he is considered in hand, and plays from the half-circle.

20.—In the event of either player using his opponent's ball and scoring, the score does not count, and the red must be spotted, and the balls broken by the non-striker, but if an opponent plays with the wrong ball, and does not score, the next player may take his choice of ball, and continue to use the ball he so choses to the end of the game. No penalty, however, attaches in either case unless the mistake be discovered and claimed by the opponent before the next stroke.

21.—No person, except an opponent, has a right to tell the player that he is using the wrong ball, or to inform the non-striker that his opponent has used the wrong ball; and if an opponent does not see the striker use the wrong ball, or seeing him, does not claim the penalty, the marker is bound to score any points made to the player.

22.—No benefit can accrue to the player if he scores and makes either of the following foul strokes, provided his opponent sees him, and claims foul, viz., touching any ball with the dress, person, or cue (except to make a stroke) or lifting both feet off the floor when playing.

23.—If in playing a stroke or a pushing stroke the striker pushes or strikes more than once, or after his ball has come in contact with another, it is unfair, and any score he may make does not count, provided his opponent claims foul. The next player follows by breaking the balls.

24.—If in the act of drawing back his cue the striker knocks his ball or any other ball into a pocket, it is reckoned a stroke and counts three to the opponent.

25.—If either player takes up a ball, unless by consent, the adversary may either have it replaced by the marker, or may cause the balls to be broken; but if any other person touches or takes up a ball it must be replaced as nearly as possible.

26.—If, after striking, the player or his opponent should by any means obstruct or hasten the speed of any ball, it is at the opponent's or player's option to have them replaced, or to break the balls.

27.—A ball stopping on the brink of a pocket, need not be "challenged;" if it remains stationary, and afterwards falls in, it must be replaced, and the score thus made does not count.

28.—The extreme penalty for scoring by any foul stroke is losing the score so made, and also the lead, as the red ball must be spotted, and the balls broken by the opponent, the player who made the foul following suit. But if the foul is not claimed by the opponent the player continues his break.

29.—If when moving the cue backwarks and forwards, and prior to a stroke, it touches and moves the player's ball, the ball must be replaced to the satisfaction of the adversary, otherwise it is a foul stroke, and no score can be allowed ; but if the player strikes, and grazes any part of the ball with any part of the cue, it must be considered a stroke, and the opponent follows on.

30.—Or, if in taking aim the player moves his ball and causes it to strike another, even without intending at the time to make a stroke, a foul stroke may be claimed by the adversary who follows on.

31.—If in hand, and in the act of playing, the striker shall move his ball with insufficient strength to take it out of baulk, it shall be counted a miss to the opponent, who, however, may have the option of obliging the player to replace his ball and play again, when any score is disallowed, but he cannot claim both penalties.

32.—Should the striker, when in hand, in playing up the table on a ball or balls in baulk, either by accident or design, strike one of them without first going out of baulk, his opponent may have the balls replaced, score a miss, and follow on, the striker being considered off the table ; or may cause the striker to play again when any score is disallowed ; or may claim a foul stroke and have the red spotted, and break the balls.

33.—If a player be in hand and either the red ball or his opponent's ball, or both, shall have stopped directly on the baulk line, the opponent shall, before the player proceeds, call on the marker to decide whether or not the ball or balls may be played at, and the marker shall call a "line ball," in which case they are not playable ; or "playable." as the case may be.

34.—No player is allowed to receive, nor any bystander to offer advice on the game, but should any person be appealed to by the marker or either player, he has a right to offer his opinion ; or if a spectator sees the game wrongly marked he may state the fact, but he must do so prior to another stroke being made.

35.—The game shall be adjudged in favour of whoever first scores the number of points agreed on, when the marker shall call game;" or it shall be given against whoever, after having commenced, shall neglect or refuse to continue when called upon by his opponent to play.

36.—The marker shall be first called on to decide disputes or to act as umpire ; but if either player considers that he has not decided the case on its merits, the player may call on the spectators, the opinion of the majority of whom must be considered final.

RULES OF THE GAME OF POOL.

1.—As many balls as there are players must be placed in a basket, shaken, and given out, one to each, by the marker. Then the players start progressively, as the colours are placed on the pool marking-board, white spotting his ball on the top spot.

2.—Each player has three lives at starting. Red plays from the half circle on white, and yellow on red, and so on, until the number is run through, each person playing on the last ball. If, however, a miss be given or a coup run, or losing hazard struck, the next player plays at the nearest ball.

3.—The baulk is no protection under any circumstances.

4.—If a player should lose a life in any way, the next player goes on at the nearest ball to his own ; if the player's ball be in hand, he plays on the ball nearest to the centre of the baulk-line, whether in or out of baulk. When a ball is played on and pocketed, a life is taken off the colour on the score-board, but should a player force the ball he plays on, off the table the owner of such ball does not lose a life, but remains in hand until it is his turn to play.

5.—Should a doubt arise respecting the distance between balls, it must (if at the commencement of the game, or if the player's ball be in hand) be measured from the centre spot in the half circle to the top of the object-balls ; but if the striker's ball be not in hand, the measurement must be made from his ball to the other ball or balls, and in either case decided by the marker, or by a majority of the players. Should the distances be equal, the owners of the nearest ball must draw lots, and the loser is played on.

6.—The player may lose a life by any one of the following means :—By pocketing his own ball ; by running a coup ; by missing a ball ; by forcing his own ball off the table ; by playing with or at a wrong ball ; or by playing out of his turn ; but playing with a wrong ball when in hand, does not cause him to lose a life, and the ball played with must be replaced directly the mistake is discovered. He cannot, however, take a life, this being the penalty of his carelessness.

7.—Should the striker pocket the ball he plays on, and by the same stroke pocket his own or force it over the table, he loses a life, and not the person whose ball he has pocketed.

8.—Should the player strike a wrong ball, he pays forfeit to the person whose ball he ought to have played at.

9.—If the striker misses the ball he ought to play and strikes another ball, whether he pockets it or not he loses a life, and not the person whose ball is hit ; in the former case the striker's ball must be taken off the table, and both must remain in hand until it be their respective owner's turn to play.

10.—If the striker, whilst taking aim, enquires which is the ball he ought to play at, and is misinformed by any one of the players or by the marker, he does not lose a life ; the balls must, in this case, be replaced, and the stroke played again.

11.—If any information be required by the player respecting his ball or his turn to play, he has a right to an answer from the marker or from the players.

12.—When a ball or balls touch the striker's ball, or are in line between it and the ball he has to play at, so as to prevent him hitting the object, they must be taken up, and after the balls have ceased running, replaced.

14.—Or if a ball or balls are in the way of the striker's cue, so as in any manner to incommode him, he can have them taken up.

15.—When the striker takes a life, he contiuues to play at the nearest ball as long as he scores a winning hazard, or until the balls are all off the table ; in which case he places his ball on the spot.

15.—The first person who loses his three lives is entitled to star, by paying into the pool the same sum as at the commencement, for which he receives lives equal in number to the lowest number of lives on the board, but only one star is allowed in a pool.

16.—If the first person out declines to star, the second out may do so ; and if the second refuses, the third may ; and so on, until only two persons are left in the pool ; in which case the privilege of starring ceases.

17.—If the striker should move his own or another ball whilst in the act of making a stroke, it is foul ; and if by the same stroke he pockets a ball the owner of the ball does not lose a life, and the ball must be considered in hand ; but if by the stroke he should pocket his own ball or force it off the table, he loses a life.

18.—If the striker's ball touches the ball he has to play at, he is at liberty either to play at it or at any other ball on the table ; and he may take a life by pocketing any ball so played on.

19.—After a hazard, if the striker should take up his ball or stop it before it has done running, he cannot claim the life or the stake from the person whose ball he has pocketed ; it being possible that his own ball might have run into a pocket if he had not stopped it.

20.—If before a star two or more balls are pocketed by the same stroke, including the ball played at, each having one life, the owner of the ball first struck has the option of starring ; but should he refuse, the colour standing first on the pool board shall have the option.

21.—Should the striker's ball stop on the spot of a ball removed, the ball which has been removed must remain in hand until the place is unoccupied, and then be replaced.

22.—Should the striker miss the ball played at, no person is allowed to remove the ball till it has ceased running.

23.—If the striker should have his player's ball removed, and stop on the spot it occupied, his ball shall be taken up and his player's replaced, and the player shall play on the nearest ball.

24.—If the striker have a ball removed, and any other than the next player's ball should stop on the spot it occupied, the ball removed must remain in hand till the one in its place be played, unless it should happen to be the turn of the owner of the one removed to play before the one on its place ; in which case that ball must give place to the one originally taken up, and then be replaced.

25.—If the corner of a cushion prevent the striker from hitting a ball, he can (except in single pool) have his ball so placed by the marker, as will enable him to play ; but he cannot take a life.

26.—The last two players must divide if they are left with an equal number of lives each ; the striker, however, is entitled to his strike before the division, except in the case of a miss, coup, or losing hazard, by the player last dead.

27.—All disputes must be decided by the marker, or by a majority of the players.

RULES OF THE GAME OF PYRAMID POOL

As Revised by Mr Wm. Cooke, (Champion); Mr. Joseph Bennett, (Ex-Champion), and other Professional Players.

1.—Pyramid is played with sixteen balls; viz., fifteen red, and one white.

2.—The coloured balls are placed on the table in the form of a triangle, the lowest ball or apex standing on the winning spot.

3.—The players string or toss for the lead, both use the white ball, and whoever pockets the greater number of red balls wins, and receives from his opponent the difference between their scores.

4.—Whoever wins the string or toss may play first or order his opponent to do so.

5.—The next player plays from the spot on which the white is left by his opponent, except it should have been pocketed or forced off the table, in which case he he plays from the baulk as at the commencement.

6.—Winning hazards alone score in favour of the players, and the same rules are generally to be observed as at common pool.

7.—If either player gives a miss, pockets the white ball, or forces it over the table, he loses one; that is to say, he must place one of the coloured balls which he has pocketed on the winning spot, if unoccupied; if occupied, the ball must be placed on the billard spot, and if that be occupied as near as possible behind the winning spot, and a point taken from his score. But if he has not scored, he is said to owe one, and must pay it when he is able.

8.—If the striker holds his own ball, or forces it over the table, and at the same time pockets one or more of the coloured balls, or forces them over the table, he gains nothing by the stroke: the coloured balls so removed must be spotted on the table, together with one of the striker's coloured balls, as a penalty.

9.—If the white ball touches a coloured one, the player may score all the coloured balls he pockets; he cannot give a miss.

10.—Should the striker move any ball in taking aim or striking, he looses whatever may be scored by the stroke.

11.—If the striker forces one or more of the coloured balls over the table, he does not score, and the balls must be replaced as in Rule 7.

12.—When all the coloured balls but one are pocketed, the player who made the last hazard continues to play with the white ball, and his opponent uses the red, as at single pool.

13.—When only two balls are left on the table, should the striker hold the ball he is playing with, or make a miss, the game is finished, and his opponent adds one to his score.
